1. Preparing for the workplace

Learning Points

- Attitude towards work will influence success in the workplace.
- Good career choices depend on thoughtful planning.
- Good interviewing and resume-writing skills can help land the job.

What does preparing for the workplace mean to you? _____

Something to think about: For most of us, to work or not to work is not an option. We rely on our jobs for both the necessities and the luxuries that a paycheck provides. Since we may spend as much as 40 to 50 years in the workplace, we should do our best to find work that fulfills us. No job will give us satisfaction all the time, no matter how much we like it most of the time. Job satisfaction, on a day-to-day basis, is partially up to us.

Activity 1:

Directions: Read each statement and indicate one or two positive opportunities. This will help you re-learn how to take every opportunity and turn it into a positive, if you don't already.

For an example: Mason gets a job flipping burgers. The work is hot and boring and there is no chance for advancement.

1) Mason will gain work experience and could use this opportunity for something else in the future. 2) In the meantime Mason will be earning an income.

1. Charlee shares an office with a person who is prejudice and does everything that's possible to show it.

2. Corryn is shy and feels quite uncomfortable in her new job.

3. Corryn’s boss likes things done a certain way. Corryn thinks there are better ways to do them.

4. Ashley is hired by a cleaning company. She is disgusted by the condition of the board room each night.

5. Mario works on the assembly line for a large company. The work is tedious.

6. Kelly works as an office clerk. She wishes she had the cushy job of the top executive.

7. Lorrie’s coworker has made her very angry. She wants to tell her what she really thinks.

8. Anthony loves his job, but the salary does not support his family.

9. Lucy works in a day care center and is disturbed that the teachers fail to prepare activities for the kids each day.

10. Scott empties trash cans and sweeps floors. He feels embarrassed to tell anyone about his job.

11. Tanya starts a job as a dishwasher. It pays very little.

Increase Job Satisfaction

1. Be positive. Approach the day with the determination that it will go well, not as a test of endurance.
2. Do you consider your work a career or just a job? If this job is not one of the stepping stones along your career path and you consider it “just a job,” perhaps you need to reconsider where you are working.
3. Enjoy your co-workers. Surely there is someone you like! Plan fun events such as birthday and holiday celebrations, which permit you to know others apart from their work skills. Go out to lunch occasionally when time and money permit it.
4. Use assertive communication skills to speak up for yourself to both employer and co-workers. Always do this in a respectful manner.
5. Maintain a balanced lifestyle. Separate work from home. When you walk through the doors, be ready to tackle what the work day brings and don’t let what is going on at home effect your performance today.
6. Set challenges for yourself. Work on skills that will help you progress along your career path, such as increased computer knowledge, positive communication, anger management and conflict resolution.
7. Learn from your mistakes. They will only make you stronger, and keep you from looking silly if you do the same thing over again.
8. Be creative. Work on solving problems that could increase work performance.

Activity 2:

Directions: Read each statement and check all that apply; at the end you will go over your answers and you will see what types of jobs may interest you as a career.

2. Why do you want to work for this company? The interviewer wants to know if you did any research on the company, including its history, culture, mission, products, services, and any recent (positive) news. Demonstrate your desire to work for the company by highlighting information you gained from your research. What are 4-5 things about the company that you would like to mention _____

3. Why should we hire you? The interviewer wants to know why you are a better fit for the position than the other applicants. Think of how your skills and experience make you the best, and how you can use both to benefit the company. Always frame your answer in a positive way. Can you save them money and/or time? Why? _____

4. What are your strengths? Related questions are “Tell me something you are extremely good at and why” and “what accomplishments are you most proud of?” The interviewer wants to know what makes you unique. What can you do that other people cannot? List 1-3 strong strengths _____

5. What are your weaknesses (positive only)? Related questions are “Name something about yourself that you can improve on and how you would do it.” This is a hard question, although interviewers like asking it to see what you will say. Be ready for it by thinking of two examples of weaknesses, and then explain how those weaknesses can be seen as strengths. _____

6. What is your formula, method, or philosophy for getting along with other people even when you have different points of view? The viewer wants to know how you handle conflict. Think about a situation in which you have been in conflict with a co-worker and how you resolved the problem in a positive way. _____

Tips on writing a cover letter

1. Avoid copying your resume

One of the most common mistakes job seekers make is to squander their cover letter by essentially converting their resume into paragraph form. This redundancy doesn't actually help the hiring manager decide if you are right for the job, or convince them that you are passionate about getting the opportunity. Use your cover letter as an opportunity to tell hiring managers what your resume can't.

2. Skip the generic salutation

A lot of cover letters start with "To Whom it May Concern." While this practice was once widely recommended, it has now become outdated. You can skip the salutation line and dive right in to the heart of your cover letter instead.

3. Research

A good cover letter can become a great one if you pepper in some information based on what you've learned about the company. Get a sense of the company's culture and goals, and write your cover letter to reflect how you would be a great fit into.

4. Get the opening right

You can start with the first sentence by stating which position you're apply for. Or, open with a one-sentence pitch that will convince the hiring manager they should consider your cover letter and resume. Try a line such as, "I'm an experienced broadcaster with more than a decade of experience in radio and television production." Grab their attention, and make them want to continue reading.

5. Keep it brief

Three paragraphs should be enough to answer the important questions a hiring manager would want answered.

- a. Who are you?
- b. Why do you want to work here?
- c. Why are you the best person for the job?

6. Focus on the company's needs

It's easy to get caught up in what a position would mean for you and your career. But a hiring manager isn't interested in why the job is perfect for you; they want to know whether you'd be a good fit, and how you could help their company. Sell yourself, and forgo the common mistake of explaining how the job would benefit you.

7. Focus on your positive strengths

Honesty is great, but a cover letter is not a place to volunteer negative information about your qualifications. During an interview the hiring manager will have a chance to question you about your weaknesses. You can gain a sense of what skills they are looking for by reading the job description. If you don't have some of these skills, you can always emphasize you're willing to learn.

8. Tell your story

How do you associate with the company? Is there something interesting you can share that describes your relationship with the company to this point? For an example if you're applying for a job with the Tribe, you can use this opportunity to explain your experiences that you gained from working with the Summer Youth Work Experience Program.

9. Customize the letter for the company and job

Don't use the same cover letter for every application. Not only does doing so increase your chances of submitting a letter with the wrong company name (which does happen, and which immediately removes you from consideration), it wastes your opportunity to introduce yourself in more depth. Remember, this is your chance to prove that you are passionate about working for a given company. If you're sending out a form letter that offers no personal connection with the brand, the hiring manager will have a hard time seeing the connection, too. Take the time to write a tailored cover letter for each position.

10. Inject personality

Don't forget to be yourself in your cover letter. In most cases, the hiring manager will appreciate reading something written by a real human being instead of bland corporate-speak. If you asked your best friend to read your cover letter, would they hear your voice in the words? If so, then you're on the right track.

Dear Sir/Madam,

Body of Cover Letter (overview): The body lets the employer know the position being applied for, why the employer should select the candidate for an interview, and how the candidate will follow-up.

First Paragraph: Start your letter with a grabber—a statement that establishes a connection with the employer or a probing question. Include why you are writing, the position you are applying for and where you found the job listing. Include any networks or mutual contacts, if you have one.

Middle Paragraph(s): The middle section should describe what you have to offer - specifically how your qualifications match the job you are applying for. Focus on relevant points about qualifications. Don't summarize your résumé: you are interpreting your résumé.

Final Paragraph: Finish off by thanking the employer for considering you for the position. Initiate action by explaining what you will do next (e.g., call the employer) or instigate the reader to contact you to set up an interview. Respectfully yours,
